Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Lectures on the Teaching of Composition Some apology seems to be needed for the publication of these lectures. They were prepared for my own pupils, and are here printed, except for a few slight changes, as they were delivered. They formed part of a long series of lectures, accompanied and, I trust, illustrated, corrected, or re-enforced by observation and practice in schools - a series intended to direct the attention of students, presently to become teachers, to some of the main problems with which they will have to deal. It may be said with truth that the best way to learn to teach is to try. to teach, and that the best way to train students for teaching is to give them opportunities for practice. And practice has in fact always formed a large part of the training, whether that process has been regarded as limited by student-days, or more happily conceived as extending through life. But though practice yields much, it yields less than all that is needed. I do not speak now of...
